Elegance without option

So complete a motor vehicle is the Honda Legend that perhaps its most telling feature is the fact that it simply has no optional extras available.

Because when Honda designed the Legend, the aim was to build a prestige car of international standing. A car without equal. A car about which nothing could be said to be needed.

The result is Legend.

Not simply a family saloon in which all manner of luxury items have been added. But a thoughtful, careful design exercise that utilizes only the best of the best.

The most demanding formula for success
Honda began in an area so select that few people ever have the chance to experience

it. World Formula One racing. Using experience no other Japanese manufacturer can claim, Honda built the Legend's V6 2.7-litre engine, Legend's double-wishbone front suspension, and Legend's 4-wheel disc anti-lock braking system.

Within the efficient aerodynamic shape, Honda embodied the elegance and dignity of a world-class saloon, before integrating a series of features unequalled in contemporary motoring.

Cruise control, Programmed Fuel Injection (PGM-FI), fully variable air-conditioning, central locking doors, power windows—even the driver's seat is electrically adjustable.

The list continues: sunroof, remote mirrors, automatic radio antenna, power steering and a host of features too numerous to explain. In fact, there are no 'extras'.

Precision without compromise

At their modern production plant Honda manufacture their pride with unheard of precision. Such as a four-coat/four-bake paint process, computer-aided stress analysis tests and quality controls so demanding they allow Honda's 3-year body protection warranty.

But the design innovations, the manufacturing standards, the style and beauty, the lists of features pages long—none can prepare a driver for the experience that awaits on the road. Only with a test-drive can you begin to appreciate this automobile.

And see why, in 1988, Honda really have given the world a new Legend.
